

ZOLA, NOVELIST AND REFORMER
289

person who stands a little apart from a battle has a clearer perception of its chances than those who are actually engaged in it. The writer feared that a fresh conviction was virtually inevitable, but he also felt that Mr. Cluer would do his best for his client, and that the ship, though it might well go down, would then at least do so with colours flying. But it was held imperative that a Queen's Counsel must be engaged, for it would be ridiculous to pit a stuff-gowns-man against the Solicitor-general! And so, after various delays and difficulties, as on the former occasion, the late Mr. Cock, Q. O., was retained, Mr. Cluer again being secured as junior counsel.

Henry Vizetelly and his trustees were still resolved to fight the case, after their own fashion; and by way of answering any charge of having broken the previous undertaking it was proposed that Ernest Vizetelly should give evidence respecting the recent expurgation of Zola's books. His father inquiring if he were prepared to do so, he immediately assented. He went further: he agreed to take, so far as the Zola volumes were concerned, at least the odium of this second affair on himself by assuming responsibility for what had been done. It was impossible for him to hesitate, — no son would hesitate to shield his father as far as might be possible,¹ — but now that the time has come to write of these matters he owes it to himself, and particularly to his children, to point out that the responsibility which he assumed was not really his.

The expurgatory work he had accomplished had been lim-

¹ Frank Yizetelly, on whom as one of the managers of the "business" the summons was actually served, had offered to take full liability for the sales, but his father would not allow it.